Cambrai

Frontier town section

Follow this route on foot or by car and discover the fortified and military heritage of Cambrai.

Surrounded by walls, the city is situated between the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation and the Kingdom of France. The citadel was built in 1543 in order to fortify the city walls in the 14th century. The ramparts had been constantly strengthened until they were demolished from 1892 onwards. The remaining elements show the evolution of the military architecture from the Middle Ages up to the 19th century.

Cambrai

strolling around the streets

This route shows the evolution of the city throughout the centuries.

From the 17th century onwards, bricks and stones replaced wood and cobs. Medieval streets, which used to be narrow and sinuous, were transformed into wide and aligned streets according to new town planning rules put into practice by order of Louis XIV in 1677 after the reunification of Cambrai and France. New developments in the 19th century improved the social lifestyle and extended the city. After two World Wars the massive reconstruction and the use of concrete gave the town centre a new style.

Cambrai

a religious city

This pedestrian route within the old part of Cambrai is dedicated to its prestigious religious history.

Named as the Cathedral Town in the 6th century, Cambrai experienced tremendous urban expansion around the religious constructions from the Middle Ages onwards. In 1559, the city turned into an archdiocese and became an eminent centre for classical and baroque arts. Two bishops, Vanderburch and Fénelon, supported the construction of major sites. Building works were stopped during the Revolution. However, many squares, streets and monuments bear witness to religious heritage.

Tourist and sightseeing boards set at every point of circuit tours will let you discover major elements and collections typical of the heritage of Cambrai and its surrounding area. You can find them randomly while strolling about the town or following one of the three sightseeing tours.
